surround sound

Office workers are expected to multitask, so why shouldn't office furnishings? BuzziSpace's new BuzziShade, an acoustic light fixture, does just that. Belgian firm Stal Collectief designed the shade to simultaneously dampen sound in and illuminate open-plan spaces. It's environmentally friendly to boot, fashioned from the company's proprietary PET waste-derived felt. Available in pendant and floor-lamp versions, BuzziShade is a dramatic 47 inches across. Try it on for size in the manufacturer's brand-new Mart showroom. space 10-111

mix and match

The Spanish design firm Lievevre Altherr Molina teams with Arper once again, this time fashioning a trio of pert accents that enliven modern office-scapes. Hang your hat on the Song coatrack, with arms shaped like musical notes, or the wall-mounted Wing coatrack's pivoting walnut arms. Similarly organic are the 20-inch pillows, with geometric patterns printed or stitched on Remix wool-nylon by Kvadrat. All coordinate with other chic offerings the firm designed for the manufacturer, including their streamlined Saya chair and triangular Ply tables. space 339

animal magic

The late, great modernist Charley Harper—known for his mesmerizing wildlife illustrations—continues to blaze trails, this time in the field of health care. Selections from the American artist's archive animate a whimsical new DesignTex collection that explores how pattern and color can enhance wellness. We're bugging out over two of the kaleidoscopic wall coverings: Ladybug and Space for All Species, both digitally printed on a sustainable substrate. space 10-32A

get wired

Cozy up in the Wireframe sofa group, designed by Industrial Facility for Herman Miller. The London-based studio conceived the clever seating with flexibility in mind: A lightweight steel-wire base ensures effortless maneuverability, while cushions upholstered in any Herman Miller Collection fabric can be removed for easy maintenance. The system employs a suspension technology—developed for the health-care industry—that evenly distributes sitting pressure. space 321

If you fancy a plush perch, Massive Design principal Mac Stopa has the seat for you. His Structure chair is composed of an internal steel frame, over which low-density polyurethane foam is molded, resulting in a highly textured surface that resembles 3-D printing. There's also a wealth of options: 11 colors for the shell, and polished chrome, black walnut, or oak for the legs.
