office

Squares and circles, make way. There's a new geometric order in town. Massive Design principal Mac Stepa's modular lounge system, Hexa, consists of 18 hexagonal seating components, which join to create a multitude of compositions. Solid wood, chipboard, and plywood form the structural frame, which is covered in polyurethane foam and upholstered in polyolefin or ecological leather, thereby establishing an effective acoustic barrier. Offered in low- and high-back versions, with or without arms, the seating is accompanied by six-sided tables in two heights; chrome legs mirror the upholstery bases. Acra
You could say that this Perini basin has something of a split personality. Designed by Mac Stepa for Duffon Cosini, the sink is a hybrid of two thematically solid surfaces: opaque white Corian and translucent Chroma, the latter by Stone. The materials are so seamlessly combined that users could get the impression the sink is perforated. In a further twist, light reflects off the countertop below to shine through the peekaboo design, enhancing the overall experience. The sink is 26 1/2 inches wide, almost 17 deep, and 5 1/2 tall. 48-500-950-778; myhrh.jp. Circle 645

You could say that this Penta basin has something of a split personality. Designed by Mac Stopa for DuPont Corian, the sink is a hybrid of two thermoformed solid surfaces: opaque white Corian and translucent Chroma, the latter by 3Form. The materials are so seamlessly combined that users could get the impression the sink is perforated. In a further twist, light reflects off the countertop below to shine through the peekaboo design, enhancing the overall experience.
