making waves

A new exploration into interior space-making, Molo's Thin Softwall, designed by Stephanie Forsythe and Todd MacAllen, is having its North American debut. Measuring just 3½ inches wide, the flexible honeycomb structure expands to 40 times its compressed size. Visitors to the showroom will get to play with and shape this new prototype, just ahead of its official public release. space 8-2094

Conceived for Bernhardt Design by Claudia and Harry Washington out of a need for seating that's moveable, open and comfortable, with no hard edges, Mitt sports a relaxed form and is named for its stitching reminiscent of a baseball glove. Its maple frame is covered in molded foam that can be upholstered in Bernhardt Textiles fabrics or leathers as well as COM. A leather handle and weight-locking casters add major mobility. A homerun for the upstart division of the Bernhardt Furniture Company, which is celebrating its 125th birthday this year. space 399

Founded in 1973 by Piet and Ina va Eijken, Netherlands rug specialist Danskina is known the world over for its pioneering use of color, materials, and techniques. Now under the ownership of sister companies Maharam and Kvadrat, the line is making its official U.S. debut as Danskina by Maharam, with the first collection by newly named design director Hella Jongerius. Among the inaugural 19 patterns, all handwoven in wool, is Multitone, its plaid reminiscent of a cozy blanket. space 1188

After working 22 years at Herman Miller, design director Alexander Girard created Environmental Enrichment panels as his final design.

all eyes on alex

Patterns like Eyes were meant to liven up the company's Action Office cubicles in the early 1970's. Now, they're available screen-printed on sustainably harvested American maple-plywood panels and come with all mounting hardware, including a spacer on the back that allows the panel to float off the wall. space 321

SPACE 377

The Breaking Form Collection pushes past tradition, giving designers new options to color, shape, scale and movement. Our collaboration with Mac Stopa of Massive Design explores bold lines and geometric patterns that transform the floor, a two-dimensional product, into something three-dimensional. Available in 3 patterns and 9 colorways, in our new 12' x 36' planks.
